PART 4: Brainstorm Healthy Ways to Cope with Emotions

Think of healthy ways you can cope with different emotions, especially difficult ones like anger, frustration, or sadness.

- When you're feeling upset, try taking slow, deep breaths. Breathe in for a few seconds, then breathe out slowly. This can help you feel calmer and more in control.
 - If you're feeling mad or sad, grab some paper and draw how you're feeling. Being creative can help you express your feelings.
 - If you're upset, it's okay to talk about it. You can talk to a parent, a teacher, or someone who makes you feel safe. Sharing your feelings can help you feel less alone.
 - If you're feeling really mad, try counting slowly to 10 (or even 20!). It gives your brain a moment to calm down before you react.
- When you're frustrated, it's okay to take a break. You can go to your room or another quiet space for a few minutes to cool down. Taking a break gives you time to feel better.
 - If you're feeling angry or have a lot of energy, try moving around. You can jump, run in place, dance, or do jumping jacks. Moving your body helps release some of those big feelings.
 - When you're feeling sad, you can hug your favorite stuffed animal or blanket. Sometimes holding something soft and cozy can make you feel a little bit better.
 - When you're feeling upset, try listening to your favorite calming music. Music can help you relax and make you feel happier.

Emotion:

What can I do next time I feel this emotion?

Who can I talk to about this emotion?
